

Dear FCC.

We have had XM radio for 2 years. My husband is a truck driver and this service, which we pay for has been very beneficial. It keeps him up to date on weather and traffic conditions that he can't get on regular radio, due to poor reception or being able to find a station that is broadcasting the information when he needs it. The NAB has no right to try and tell anyone where we have to get our information from.

This is a free country, built on free enterprise. Concentrate on important things and let the radio and tv stations figure out how to upgrade their products to compete in today's market.

Thank you,
Stacy Wallingford
